Weather Prognostications.

The Rosnoke, N. C. News, predicts that the approaching winter will be one of unusual severity, and gives its reasons for thinking so. The News says that a heavy persimmon crop means a hard winter. This year's crop of persimmons is large. It is said that a large crop of acorns and locusts indicates a severe winter. The crop of acorns and nuts is unusually large this fall. We have always heard that when the skin of apples is thick, that a very cold winter is sure to follow, and this isthe case this year, so all signs point very cheering prospect, with cotton selling at about five cents. If the prediction is verified, it means great suffering for the poor and it is to be hoped that the signs will fail this year. With everything rising in price, excepting cotton, the outlook is dismal enough, and a severe winter would make things very much werse, but we will not place too much confidence in this prediction, and will hope that it will prove
